

What's For Tea?

Wireframes

Common device sizes are:

- Mobile Phones (small Materialize sizing)
- Tablets (medium Materialize sizing)
- Desktops (large Materialize sizing)

Wireframes were created on the 16th January 2021 during the UX Design planning phase of the project. The wireframes were designed in Pencil Wireframes.

The site is heavily influenced by the initial wireframes with a few notable exceptions. In the recipes page the create new recipe button has been re-styled as a more commonly expected floating action button in the bottom right of the page. Also the recipes are contained within cards rather than accordion drop downs and these cards are clickable links to each individual recipe. This was to improve UX as this layout is much more common across many sites a user may already be familiar with. Button has also shifted to the side where possible and sometimes repeated at the bottom of the page to aid the user if scrolling through larger pages, and the wording has been replaced by icons at small and medium levels and enhanced by these icons at large breakpoint levels.

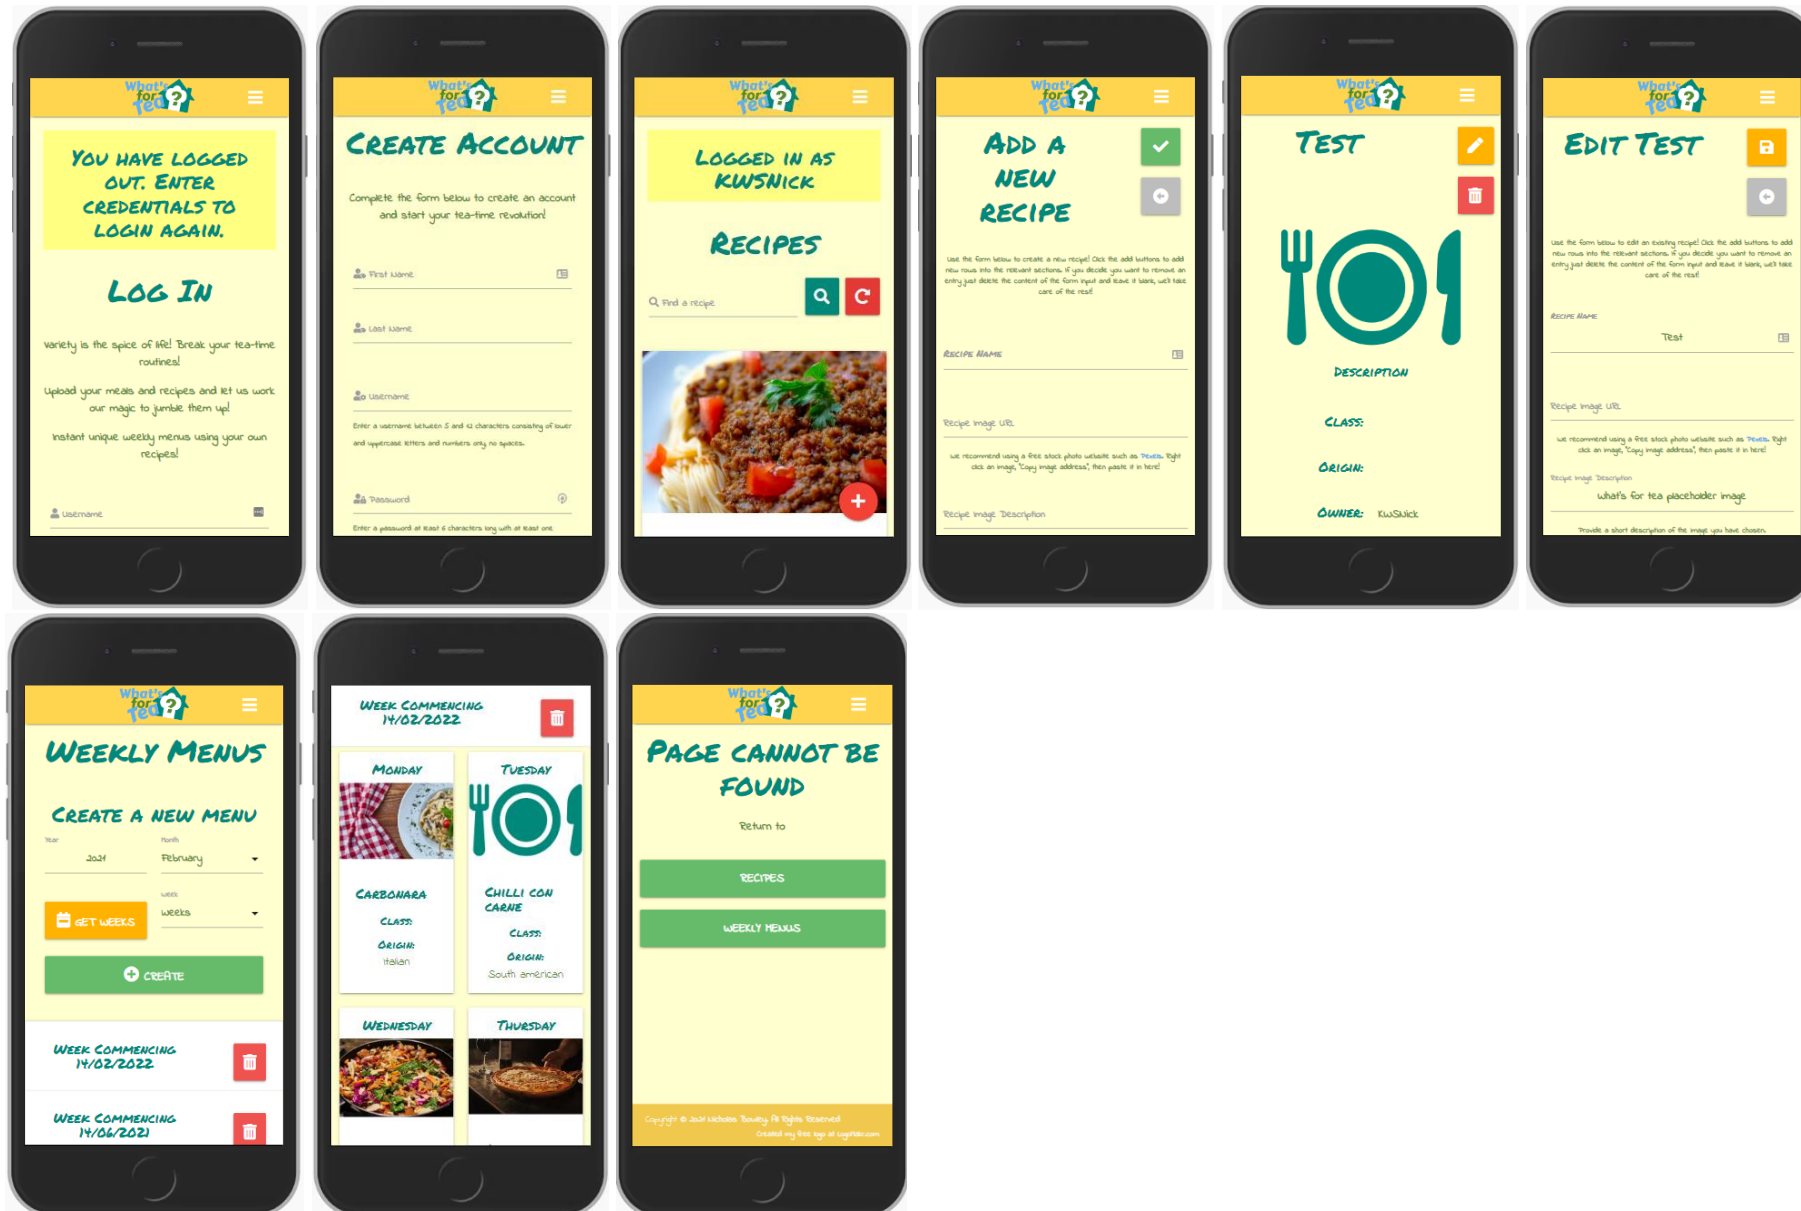

The create menu feature has significantly changed, plans to provide this function in a modal were dropped to reduce clicks, and the customisation of the menu was paired back to ensure the product was deployed within the specified timescale.

The recipes are now viewable as a full page of information and only summarised on their associated cards to better present the potential quantity of information to the user. The intent with the create, view and edit pages for recipes was to keep the layouts as similar as possible to make them more familiar to the user.
